PORTE CRAYON.—The Wheeling Intelligencer in a notice of Gov. Pierpont's recent visit to Washington, makes mention of Lt. Strother, better known to the reading world as "Porte Crayon."

At Washington Gov. Pierpont met with the famous Porte Crayon—a loyal Virginian of the strictest and straightest sect. He is serving on Gen. Banks' staff, and is one of the most thorough and unconditional fighting men of the war. He entertained the Governor's company with some fine sketches of Virginia history and life—not such as he used to embody in his sketches for Harper, fine as they were, but with solid, practical, statesmanlike portraitures. He is devoted to Virginia, and especially to the idea of her regeneration—He believes in her capacity for a newness of life beyond that of any State in the Union, provided only that the old, corroding and withering policy of the past can be forever broken in this war. Said he, at the close of one conversation, "I have traveled in every civilized country in the world, and I have been in every State in this Union. I know what their capacities are for the sustenance of population, for the accumulation of wealth, the enjoyment of health, the bounties of nature, the development of art, science, industry, and enterprise of every possible sort, and I tell you that Virginia as she could be, and as she will be, exceeds them all—immeasurably exceeds them."

But we have labored under a curse from the dawn of our existence. As a State we have talked politics—wrote politics—dreamed politics—abstractionized politics—just as John Smith's men at Jamestown "dug gold—washed gold—refined gold and shipped gold"—and starved at last, because their gold was not gold, but only counterfeit trash. So with us. We have politicalized the life and marrow and fatness and capacity of our State away, and depended all the while on the nigger to make a living for us, and achieve the work that none but Anglo Saxons can achieve.—All this is changing at race horse speed, said he, and the change will soon be complete, despite of all the cries of nigger! nigger! in the mouths of blatant Secession sympathizers, and out of the change will come forth, like pure gold from the fiery ordeal, a great State, ready for a great future.]

Indian Traditions

The Indians of this coast have little idea of their origin or history. The Machahs on the south side of Fuca Straits have, however, some curious ideas [illegible] deemed very simple nonsense by white people. Necessity has forced them to get up houses of rather an improved character, made of logs and boards, which latter they split out of cedar. In these houses, sometimes fifty and seventy feet long, several families live. Their principal subsistence is from fish and roots, not having much game. Dead whales are often thrown on their shores, and some years they obtain from them ten thousand gallons of oil, besides an untold amount of putrid blubber, which they consider a great delicacy. Their mechanical genius is very limited. They make their canoes, implements for fishing, make blankets from dog's hair and cedar bark, baskets from grass or rushes, and carve the rudest images. They are fond of music, and have learned several popular tunes from the sailors who come in ships from San Francisco. Lightning they believe is caused by a great fish, and they believe that the whales which are found on their shores are killed by the Thunder Bird, who takes the fattest of those he kills up into the mountains where he has his mate, and his young devours them. They even say that sometime in the past a Thunder Bird's nest was discovered. It was half a day's walk around it, and the eggs were so large that it was impossible to get to the top of one of them. The screams of this awful bird so terrified the Indians that they never dared again to approach the nest—the rim or outside of which was composed of tremendous rocks. A quill of one of these birds, found near the nest, was forty fathoms long, and was of the size of the tallest and largest cedars.

The Machahs have some dim ideas of the people living in the far North of this Continent. They have a legend about the Northern Lights. They suppose a race of Indians live under the North Star. "Under that little sun," said one of them, "a great distance from here, live a race of Indians who are not taller than half the length of my paddle. They live on the ice and eat seals and snakes. They are so strong that they can dive down into the water and catch whales with their hands, and that light which we see flashing up in the North and covering the skies is from the fires of these little people boiling blubber." He said their "names were Eskimos, but they were skookums."

This is a new theory in regard to the cause of the Aurora Borealis, and who knows that on the shores of the polar ocean, found to be open by Dr. Kane, as far as the glass could reach, and which kept up the eternal lashes of its surges on the Northern capes of this continent,—we say, who knows that there are not upon the shores of this ocean a pigmy human race, which so far as we know diminishes in size as we advance into the frozen regions of the North? Who knows?

Fight with Indians

From J. M. Kirkpatrick, who arrived in this city last Friday evening from Auburn, Powder river, we have received the following particulars of a fight between a band of Cayuses and a detachment of soldiers, under command of Capt. Geo. B. Currey. For a year or two back there has been among the remnant of the Cayuses living at the Umatilla Reservation, a couple of Indians termed "dreamers," who represented themselves as having direct communication with the Great Spirit. These dreamers had managed to gather around them a few followers, to whom they were in the habit of detailing from time to time the directions of their great Spirit, and among other things they told that it was revealed that the Indians should again repossess the whole of this country. Thus things passed along until a recent date, when a brother of one of the dreamers was shot and killed by Indian Agent Barnhart. This greatly incensed the two Prophets, who immediately thereafter, in company with some twenty other Indians, withdrew from the Reservation and established themselves in the North end of Grand Ronde valley, over which they claimed exclusive jurisdiction, and even went so far as to order settlers off, threatening death and destruction in the event of a failure to remove. This conduct on the part of the Indians greatly alarmed the whites, and some of them accordingly removed. There was one settler, however, who was too slow in his movements to suit Indian haste, and his house was torn down over his head. These depredations coming to the knowledge of the commander at Fort Walla Walla, Capt. Currey, with twenty men of his command, was dispatched to the "seat of war," with instructions to bring in the two "dreamers." Capt. C. reached the Indian camp at the north end of Grand Ronde valley, on Thursday, the 14th inst., and immediately apprised the Indians of the object of his coming.

According to Indian custom a long "talk" was had on the matter, in the course of which both of the "dreamers" expressed themselves unwilling to comply [illegible] the [illegible] at the [illegible] Capt. C. [illegible] Indians that he would [illegible] to make up their minds, and [illegible] ready to [illegible] that he [illegible] take them by force; that he was sent there to take them and he was not going away without them. At the expiration of the appointed time Capt. Currey again entered the lodge, and finding the two Indians still unwilling [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] head discharged it. Fortunately Capt. C. saw the movement quick as [illegible] savage's aim up, and the ball passed over his head. Quick as thought the officer then drew his pistol and shot his assailant through the head, killing him instantly. At this time it was discovered that all the Indians in the lodge were armed, and [illegible] heard Capt. C.'s [illegible] his assistance, and a regular volley was poured into the Indians, leaving four of their number dead, among whom was the two "dreamers," who had thus [illegible]. The fight over, Capt. C. then withdrew his command, leaving the Indians, from whom no trouble is apprehended now that they have lost their leaders.

Thirty more Passengers and Crew of the Golden Gate Saved

By the arrival of the steamship Oregon [illegible] San Francisco on the morning of the 17th inst., we have additional news by way of telegraphic dispatches to the Union, of the safety of seventeen more passengers and thirteen of the crew of the ill-fated Golden Gate. The following is the statement of Mr. S. [illegible] Storms, one of the fortunate persons who were saved in the Third Mate's boat, under command of [illegible] Scott.

Storms says that when the [illegible] out he was standing on the hurricane deck, and when the flames were seen coming through the hatchway he and Holladay let themselves down to the anchor and remained there until the chain by which they held gave way, when they fell into the water. Holladay could not swim, supporting himself with a ladder. Storms came up ten feet ahead of the wheel. Seeing the danger of his position, with great presence of mind he dived under the wheel and came up again some fifty feet astern of the vessel, with Holladay on the [illegible]. The two [illegible] their situation, and Storms says that he never knew a man behave so coolly as did Holladay under such trying circumstances. [illegible] seems to have struck Storms with great force as he commenced bleeding at the lungs, but, nothing dismayed, he folded his arms across his breast and nearing a plank he happened to obtain possession of, he floated in the water until he was picked up by the first mate's boat. After some delay the male passengers were transferred from the first mate's boat to the one under the charge of the third mate, all the ladies who had been rescued remaining in the former. Nolan, the first mate, then gave instructions to Scott, the third mate, to keep pulling in shore, and if he, Nolan, reached Manzanillo first, he would light a signal fire on the shore to serve as a guide for the other boat. The boats then separated, and at this time they were about twelve miles north of Manzanillo. Scott's crew continued rowing until twelve o'clock that (Sunday) night and then lay to, supposing that the tide was against them and that they were still [illegible] the south of Manzanillo, whereas during the night they drifted some fifteen or twenty miles to the southward of that port. On Monday morning the sailors were convinced that they were northward of their desired destination, and continued rowing until about three o'clock P. M. During all this time, twenty-two hours, the persons under Scott's charge had had nothing either to eat or drink. Half of them were naked, and all were utterly exhausted by their exertions. Under these circumstances, it was resolved to beach the boat. The breakers rolled mountain high, and the experiment was one full of danger. Two of the rollers were passed in safety, but the third struck her broadside and swamped her. The passengers, however, fortunately reached the shore, evidently having been carried thither by the force of the swell. Storms was [illegible] nearly up to his armpits in the sand, and several others were placed in a similar perilous situation. When the party reached the shore they presented a most deplorable appearance. Some of them, from excessive thirst, had become half crazed by drinking salt water. Others had nothing but a shirt on their backs; amongst them was Storms himself, and the majority despaired yet of being saved. [illegible] yet remained of opinion that they were north of Manzanillo, although they were sixty miles to the southward, and the party walked some fifteen miles along the beach as far as within a mile of the river Apaza. Here they slept all night on the sand. On Tuesday morning they recommenced their march and crossed the river. Not until this time did they discover their error.

They then retraced their steps some five miles, when fortunately they encountered a Mexican, who conducted them to a deserted shanty and went off himself to procure water and food. We should here remark that the conduct of a Prussian, Max Selligsohn, was infamous. He saved his money and the clothes he had on him. While walking along the beach he took off his pantaloons and carried them on his arm, and although he wore drawers, he refused to let either of his naked companions wear either the pantaloons or drawers. Finally he was forced to give up that which he could not [illegible] for money. In striking contrast with the conduct of this man was that of Julius Sissonger. He freely divided his money [illegible] he had with the rest. In fact all who had means most liberally and freely contributed and otherwise behaved handsomely. The Mexican returned after some thirty hours absence with an abundance of provisions. The party having been thus relieved, they were conducted to a Mexican village, and there staid until Friday morning. They desired to proceed to Manzanillo direct, but the Alcalde interposed, objecting that they might be taken for spies or by robbers, and gave them passes to Colima. At the village horses were obtained at ten dollars each, and the party reached Colima on Saturday, at noon. Here they were treated most hospitably by the inhabitants, and especially by Don R. DeLiveaga, a prominent citizen, who offered his house and did all that lay in his power to relieve their wants and sufferings. Storms was his guest, and speaks in high terms of the Spaniard's noble conduct.

Some three or four hundred dollars were subscribed by the citizens, besides horses, food and clothing. On Tuesday morning the parties started for Manzanillo, which place they reached on Wednesday night.

Storms says that they received the kindest treatment from the officers and passengers of the Orizaba. A sum of four hundred dollars was raised, and those who were in want of clothing were liberally supplied.

The rebels lost [illegible] killed and wounded. We captured [illegible] wagon loads of forage and seven horses. We lost the [illegible] of two regiments. This is the only engagement in the vicinity of Cumberland Gap or Tazewell, and rebel reports of the capture of Gen. Carter's command utterly untrue.

Powers' Statue of California.—The [illegible] [illegible] correspondent [illegible] the [illegible]:

On one side of the garden [illegible] is the statue of California, by Hiram Powers. It is full of grace and beauty, and is an illustration of the early promise of the Pacific [illegible] [illegible] hospitality [illegible] Greek Slave, and the Slave [illegible] Mr. Powers' original idea of the California was a colossal figure in bronze, to be placed on a suitable pedestal to commemorate the spot where gold was first discovered. It is a beautiful thought, and I wish that some of the fortunate miners who have grown wealthy [illegible] suitable token to their adopted State. There are so many people of good taste, as well as fortune, in California, that it seems like a reproach that this beautiful statue should remain unsold. Might not the city of San Francisco buy it for some of her public buildings, or Sacramento for her Capitol?

The MORNING OREGONIAN has a larger SUBSCRIPTION LIST than any other Daily published in this City.

THE DAILY OREGONIAN may be had at the [illegible] Book Store [illegible] Charles Barrett's [illegible]

AN ITEM.—Our reporter caught an item last evening by being attracted to Vaughn's wharf, upon hearing martial music proceeding from Dennison's Cornet Band, on board the steamer Maria, which it seems had taken a trip down to a wood yard a short distance below town, and to enliven the occasion had taken on board the above named Band, and a few friends simply for grandeur we suppose. The steamer, on her return, passed the full length of the town, up and down stream and again returned to her usual moorings affording a fine opportunity for a display of her parts and power, as also the plaudits of those on [illegible], both pleasing to the sight and agreeable to the ear, as everybody loves to hear good music and see a fine steamer under full headway, plowing the bosom of a majestic stream. We would modestly suggest however, that the occasion would have been much improved, more imposing, and perhaps equally as respectable had an invitation been extended to members of the Press.

PERSONAL.—Hon John R. McBride called upon us yesterday afternoon, and spent a few moments in social chat. Mr. McBride is on a visit to Astoria, where he expects to spend a few weeks with his friends.

Also, our good friend, Mr David Craig, of the Oregon Argus called upon us last evening, who is also en route for Astoria to spend a few days of agreeable recreation from a siege of arduous toil.

RICH SPECIMENS.—We were shown, Saturday last, by Mr. Kirkpatrick, a very fine specimen of quartz gold obtained at Auburn, Powder river. A very rich quartz lead has been struck near the town of Auburn and it is the opinion of old miners who have [illegible] the lead, that it will prove the richest quartz mine in the world. Parties who have commenced work upon it have already taken out large amounts and when fairly opened there is no telling how much will be realized daily. Pounds will be taken out instead of ounces.

FROM THE CASCADES.—The Julia brought down a large number of passengers Saturday evening, from the Cascades, and considerable gold dust. The Maria also brought down a fair number of passengers and about an equal [illegible] of dust. We are indebted to Mossman & Co. for copy of late Mountaineer and other favors.

IMMIGRANTS.—Mr. Kirkpatrick states that over one hundred of the overland emigrants had arrived in the Powder river valley before he left Auburn, and that they report an immense emigration coming, nearly all bound for Oregon and Washington. Many of the emigrants have large bands of stock, some of them having as many as 1,000 head of sheep. The trip had been accomplished without difficulty, and but very few Indians seen this side of Fort Hall. It is thought that the Snakes have abandoned their usual summer haunts but we may yet hear of their being seen in large numbers and of depredations.

FUNERAL.—The funeral obsequies of poor J. T. Whitman alias "Nibbs," was well attended by the firemen of our city, on Saturday last, and the procession was very respectable and imposing. This speaks well for the Fire Department, and illustrates the true principle which charity dictates upon occasions of this kind. Death is no respecter of persons and the living should not forget the lesson.

POWDER RIVER.—The number of persons at present employed in the Powder river mines is estimated at between 1,000 and 1,500 and more would find work was it not for the scarcity of water.

WORLD'S FAIR.—It is estimated that from fifty to sixty thousand persons visit the World's Fair, at London, daily. California is represented in the exhibition very meagerly. A correspondent of the Bulletin says on this head:

"I have made diligent search in the American department for anything and everything pertaining to California. Mr. Shiels, the Commissioner for the State, kindly pointed out what there was, but that was very little. The most important seems to be Hanshaw's force pump, which receives a good deal of attention. There are some specimens of cinnabar from the mines of New Idria and New Almaden; silver ore from Washoe; gold in quartz and copper from various quarters. I also saw a table from the variegated marble of Napa. Altogether the display is very meagre. The entire American department is poor, and disappointing to the casual observer; but still I believe that it contains many useful inventions and objects of real value."

PARSON BROWNLOW ON THE CONDUCT OF THE WAR.—"This country is now pursuing a course with this infernal, wicked rebellion which I do not approve of; unless we pursue a different and more vigorous one, we shall not end this rebellion in God's world!" The tremendous applause at the end of the sentence gave good evidence that there is a large number of persons in Washington who agree with the Parson. He returned to this point again—it seemed to be a very important one with him. The Government must adopt a more vigorous war policy, or give up the attempt to put down the rebellion. He was sure of that. He has no faith whatever in the "conciliatory policy," for the reason that the rebels are determined not to be conciliated. They will only give up to actual brute force.—Washington Cor. N. Y. Evening Post.

PROLIFIC.—A cow belonging to Mr. Ogilvie at San Rafael, California, astonished the community, on the morning of the 20th ult. by giving birth to three bull calves—all well. There is some propriety, the reader will agree with us, in calling this a bully cow. California is a bully State, and we are no longer surprised at announcements like the above.—Ex.

Hetty Marvin

When the British and tories attacked New London, Connecticut, in 17[illegible], and set a price on the head of Gov. Griswold, the latter fled to the town of L——, where his cousin, Mrs Marvin, hid him for some days, in a secluded farm-house. But at length the subtle foe discovered his retreat, and one sunny afternoon in May, he was routed from his hiding place by the tidings that a band of horsemen were approaching to capture him.

His only chance of escape was to reach the mouth of a little creek, which emptied itself into the Connecticut river just above the entrance of the latter into Long Island Sound. There he had a boat stationed with two faithful attendants hidden beneath the high banks of the creek. The distance from the farm-house to the boat was two miles by the usual traveled road. But a little sheep path across the farmer's orchards would bring him to the road only a mile from the boat, and save a quarter's length of his fearful run for life.

Just where the narrow path from the orchard opened into the road, Hetty Marvin sat with her dog Towser, tending the bleaching of the household linen. The long web of forty yards or more, which was diligently spun and woven during the long winter months, was whitened in May, and thus made ready for use. The business of bleaching was well economized, being usually done by the younger daughters of the family, who were not old enough to spin, or strong enough for the heavier work of the kitchen and dairy.

The roll of linen was taken by the farmer or his stout "help" to a grassy plat, beside a spring or meadow brook. There it was thoroughly wetted and spread upon the green turf to take the heat of the sun by day and the dew by night. The little maiden who tended it would sit near it, during the day, with her knitting or her book, and as fast as the sun dried its folds, she would sprinkle the water over it with her gourd shell dipper, and make it wet again.

Thus sat Hetty Marvin, the young daughter of Gov. Griswold's cousin, when her hunted friend sprang past her into the road, to escape his pursuers. Hetty was timid child of about twelve years, yet thoughtful and wise beyond many of her elders. She was frightened by the headlong haste with which the governor rushed across the meadow. But she quickly comprehended the scene, and instantly quieted her faithful Towser, who, though a friend of the family guest, thought it becoming to bark loudly at his hurried steps.

Her wise forethought arrested the governor's notice, and suggested a scheme to delude his pursuers. "Hetty," he said earnestly, "I am flying for my life, and unless I can reach my boat before I am overtaken, I am a lost man. You see the road forks here. Now I want to run down this way to the river. But you must tell the rascals who are chasing me, that I have gone up the road to catch the mail wagon, which will soon be along, you know. Then they will turn off the other way.

"Oh, cousin," said the little girl in an agony of distress, "I cannot tell a lie; indeed I cannot; why did you tell me which way you were going?"

"Hetty, my child, surely you would not betray me to my death. Hark! they are coming; I hear the click of their horses feet. Oh! Hetty, tell them I have gone up the road instead of down and heaven will bless you."

"Heaven never blesses those who bespeak falsely, cousin. But I will not tell them which way you go, even if they kill me; so run quickly as possible."

"It's of no use, unless I can deceive them I am a dead man."

"Cousin, cousin, hide under my web of cloth; they'd never think of looking here for you. Come, get down as quick as you can, and I'll cover you, and stand sprinkling my linen."

"It's my only chance, child: I'll get down as you say." And suiting the action to the word, the governor was soon hidden under the ample folds of cloth.

Angry that their expected prey had escaped from the house where they hoped to secure him, the six mounted tories, headed by a British officer, dashed along the road in swift pursuit. At sight of the little girl in the meadow, the leader of the party paused.

"Child," he said, sternly, "have you seen a man running away hereabouts?"

"Yes, sir," replied Hetty, trembling and flushing.

"Which way did he go?"

"I promised not to tell, sir."

"But you must, or take the consequences."

"I said I wouldn't tell if you killed me," sobbed the frightened girl.

"I'll have it out of her," exclaimed the furious officer, with an oath.

"Let me speak to her," said his tory guide. "I know the child, I believe. Is'nt your name Hetty Marvin?" he asked pleasantly.

"Yes, sir."

"And this man who ran by you a few minutes ago, was your mother's cousin, wasn't he?"

"Yes, sir, he was."

"Well, we are friends. What did he say to you when he came along?"

"He—he told me—that he was flying for his life."

Just so, Hetty, that was very true. I hope he wont have to fly far. Where was he going to try to hide? You see, I could help him, if I knew his plans."

Now Hetty was not a whit deceived by this smooth speech. But she was willing to tell as much of the truth as would consist with his safety, and she wisely judged that her frankness would serve her kinsman better than her silence. So she answered her questioner candidly. "My cousin said that he was going down this way to the river where he had a boat; and he wanted me to tell the men that were chasing him, that he had gone the other way to catch the mail wagon."

"Why didn't you do as he bid you, then, when I asked where he had gone?" thundered the officer, fiercely.

"I could not tell a lie, sir," was the tearful answer.

"Hetty," again began the smooth-tongued tory, "you are a nice child. Everybody knows you are a girl of truth. What did your cousin say when you told him you couldn't tell a falsehood?"

"He said he shouldn't think I'd betray him to his death."

"And then you promised him that you wouldn't tell which way he went, if you was killed for it.

"Yes, sir."

"That was a brave speech, and so, I suppose, he thanked you for it, and ran down the road as quickly as possible!"

"I promised not to tell where he went sir?"

"Oh! yes, I forgot. Well, tell us his last words, and we won't trouble you any more."

"His last words were, 'Its my only chance, child, and I'll get down as you say.'" And overcome by the fright, and the sense of her kinsman's danger should they rightfully interpret the language which she had reported, she sobbed aloud, and hid her face from sight.

Her tormentors did not stay any longer to soothe or question her. They had got, as they supposed, the information which they wanted, and pushed rapidly on down to the river. Now, the Governor had arranged a signal with his boatmen, that a white cloth by day, or a light in the night, displayed from the attic window of his hiding-place, which was just visible at the mouth of the creek, should inform them if he were in trouble, and put them upon the alert to help him. As soon therefore as he started from his cousin's the signal floated from the window to warn them. And when they saw the pursuing party dash madly down toward the river and recognized the British uniform of the leader they pulled swiftly out to sea. The horsemen reached the shore only in season to see the boat, with two men in it, nearly out of sight, and supposing their destined prey had escaped, relinquished the pursuit.

Meanwhile the hunted victim lay safe and quiet, where the simple shrewdness of his little cousin had hidden him, until the time came for her return to the house to supper. Then he bade her go as usual to her home, telling her to ask her mother to place the signal lamp as soon as it grew dark, in the window for the boatmen, and to send him there some supper with his valise, which, in the hurry of departure, he had left behind.

The signal recalled the boat, which after twilight had ventured in sight of the shore and the farm-house, and the Governor quietly made his way to the river in safety. When he rejoined his father in a secure home, he named his infant daughter, which had been born in his absence, "Hetty Marvin," that he might be daily reminded of the little cousin whose truth and shrewdness had saved his life.

In the Legend of the Tree of Life, published in New York, 1776, occurs the following: "Trees and woods have twice saved the world—first by the ark, then by the cross; making full amends for the evil fruit on the tree in Paradise by that which was borne on the tree in Golgotha.

No fun is honest which is not fun for both parties.
